

WEIRD NEWS

Bloodstained Men and Their Friends protest circumcision in Toms River over the weekend

Courtney Marabella

Asbury Park Press

Published 8:21 a.m. ET July 24, 2018 | Updated 9:22 a.m. ET July 25, 2018

If you saw a group of men dressed in all white with bloodstains on their crotches in Toms River this weekend, don't worry, you weren't imagining things.

The Bloodstained Men and Their Friends, a group that protests circumcision, made a stop in New Jersey this weekend, holding demonstrations in Toms River and Atlantic City as part of a nationwide tour, according to reports.

According to their Facebook page, the group's mission is to give "victims of genital cutting a voice" and educate people on the "harms of infant circumcision and the importance of the foreskin."

More: Reactions to Bloodstained Men and Their Friends circumcision protest in Toms River

According to a report from New Jersey 101.5, the men gathered in the two New Jersey locations, held signs and talked to passers-by.

Below is a video taken by the group at the Atlantic City gathering.

The group will be back in New Jersey on August 8, when the plan to protest in Newark.